

THE LANE WINSLOW MYSTERIES BY IONA WHISHAW

General Reading Questions

1. The character of Lane Winslow was inspired by Iona's mother who spent some time as wartime spy. Are there any characters in this series who remind you of someone in your own life? Why?
2. Lane is bound by the Wartime Secrets Act and must keep her activities as a spy a secret for decades after the war, even from her husband. Famously, women were treated as mere wives and helpmeets by their husbands, who never learned how brilliant their wives had been in perceived "male spheres." How difficult would it have been to be the woman in these marriages? Do you think you could keep a secret like that in your own life?
3. We may be biased, but we think that this series would make a pretty great TV show. Who would you cast as Lane, Darling, and Ames? What about Kenny and Eleanor?
4. Certain scenes and even major plot lines in this series have been inspired by questions asked or comments made by readers and fans—for instance, we learn about the teenage years of the Hughes sisters in An Old, Cold Grave because a fan asked Iona about them at a reading, and Terrell rides a motorcycle because of a fan letter that Iona received suggesting he could provide expertise if she was so inclined to include one. If you could suggest a plot point for a new book in the series, what would it be?
5. Lane gets herself into trouble just as often as she gets herself out of it. Are there scenes when you find yourself yelling at Lane "don't do that!" or "don't go in there!" or "wait for backup, Lane!" What personal strengths does Lane call on when she is in these situations?
6. This series illuminates quite a lot of Canadian postwar history. Iona writes about Russian interference in Death in a Darkening Mist and A Deceptive Devotion, home children in An Old, Cold Grave, the National Unity Party in A Sorrowful Sanctuary, and the forced migration of the Sinixt people in Framed in Fire. What is the most surprising aspect of Canadian history that you've learned from Lane Winslow?
7. This series has been praised for addressing social issues—racism, xenophobia, domestic violence, sexual abuse, feminism—that are still current today. What storyline were you most surprised to encounter in King's Cove / Nelson in the late 1940s?

A Lethal Lesson (#8)

1. By this time we all know what happened at the teacher's cottage. There are suspects aplenty, and motives enough to suit them all. Who did you suspect and why?
2. The rural one-room schoolhouse was an extremely important feature of early education in Canada and many parts of the US. What might be some advantages to education in one? What about some disadvantages?
3. Kenny and Eleanor Armstrong are the bedrock of King's Cove, which is a tiny community with fewer than ten families. Such communities can easily descend into dissensions, disputes, and even outright threats of violence, and yet the residents of King's Cove seem to maintain a balance that never tips over. What is it about the role and personalities of the Armstrongs that helps this community keep its balance, when clearly there are natural potential points of friction among them?
